Objectives

The ultimate goal of the conference is to improve the care of persons with life-threatening illnesses.

- Define palliative care and discuss its basic principles.
- Improve understanding of who should be referred to a palliative-care program and when the referral should take place.
- Discuss missed opportunities for palliative care, particularly for persons in nursing and residential homes.
- Improve understanding of the physical and psychological issues associated with living with life-threatening illnesses and identify strategies to relieve them.
- Discuss ethical issues in palliative care.

General Conference Information

Target Audience

This program is designed for physicians, nurses, ethicists, pharmacists, social workers, guardians, case managers, counselors, hospice care providers, clergy, nursing home administrators/staff, community service agency staff and all others interested in expanding their knowledge of ways to improve the care of persons facing serious illness and death.

About the Program

Palliative care is a comprehensive approach to medical care that enhances comfort and improves the quality of life of patients and families facing life-threatening illness. Its objective is the prevention and relief of suffering and other causes of distress that may be physical, emotional or spiritual in nature. This conference will examine the impact and promise of palliative care in the delivery of healthcare in central and southern Illinois.
